Arc energy resources acquires clg engineering

Gloucestershire-based Arc Energy Resources, the specialist in coating and interference coatings, has acquired the business of CLG Engineering, based in Stroudshire, Gloucestershire.

CLG Engineering provides CNC milling, CNC turning and metrology services to companies from the oil and gas, innovative and engineering industries. With an impressive history of over 40 years’ engineering experience, the acquisition further enhances Arc Energy Resources’ service offering.

Creating new barriers with graphene

According to Applied Graphene Materials (AGM), independent testing has shown that the addition of both graphene and graphene oxide to marine Topcoat 300 marine topcoat, has demonstrated performance enhancements in standard anti-corrosion and barrier test. Very small additions of AGMs dispersed water-soluble transmission rates by up to 95% and extended time to failure to 300 days.

AGM reports that it has already received several product development programmes and this latest results highlights the technical and commercial viability of this technology.
